Why journalism?

When a high school junior applied to the Journalism Division of Northwestern's National High School Institute, she admitted she "wasn't sold" on a journalism career -- even though she already was an editor for her school newspaper.

However, she knew she wanted to become "a more organized, more coherent, and more forceful writer." Also, she said she wanted to experience college living and dormitory life "before I make a (four-year) commitment to any university."

Most students come to the Journalism Division with similar goals. And most students go home, as she did, wanting a career in journalism and knowing a lot more about life on a college campus.

This summer 80 high school journalists from around the country will be immersed in the same challenges: news media, the world of ideas, and college living. The program takes place in a residential college setting - a community of scholars - where students learn by doing and by careful evaluation of their work.

Educational philosophy

The program is designed for students who wish to become better writers and editors for print, online or broadcast. Much of what you learn you can apply to your school newspapers and yearbooks. But the program is broader than a workshop for high school editors. You'll study journalism from a "professional's perspective," learning from top-notch practitioners and distinguished college teachers.

The training you will receive in writing clearly, concisely, and accurately will serve you for years to come, no matter what your college major or chosen career. Also, you'll study with people from all parts of the country (last year, students came from 21 states, Singapore, South Korea and Taiwan). Frequently, students form lasting friendships with classmates and teachers.

Course offerings

- Lab sessions to sharpen journalistic skills (write news and feature stories, editorials, and television news; edit stories others have written; write headlines; design newspaper pages; and report the news).
- Seminars with university professors and outstanding journalists to discuss subjects such as ethical considerations, interviewing techniques, online media, and video blogs.
- Workshops to teach free-lance writing, sports reporting, and magazine publishing and to discuss issues concerning high school journalism, among other subjects.
- Field trips to Chicago's media and other locations.
- Discussion sessions to analyze contemporary journalistic issues.
- Special classes to study newer story-telling forms such as podcasting and blogging.
- Film and video showings to review works of and about American journalism.
- Weekly sessions with teachers on a one-to-one basis to evaluate and analyze writing assignments. (The student-teacher ratio is 10:1.)

What some 2009 students said:

This was a life-changing program. It opened my eyes to the real world of journalism, which has heightened my passion to become a professional journalist.

Elizabeth Azran, California

I could not have asked for better instructors. Their diversity of expertise was essential to their success in teaching a group of all-platform journalists.

Jeffrey Zalesin, New York

The cherub program re-energized me and rekindled my passion for writing. Thank you for all the lessons, kindness, generosity and fun. I really am so grateful for having been a part of this fantastic program.

Christine Chang, California

I learned more about journalism at cherubs than I did in my three years on my high school newspaper.

Hillary Lindwall, Illinois

I never could have imagined the relationships and camaraderie I developed with the other journalism students over five weeks. I now feel like I have known my fellow cherubs and staff at the program for my whole life.

Stanley Kay, Florida

The academic schedule was perfect—just the right amount of work and play.

Kristin Leffler, New Hampshire

Everyone at cherubs was bright, intelligent and creative and had something special to offer. I was incredibly inspired.

Kathryn Gourley, Oregon

Each time I recount my experiences to a friend or family member, I am overcome with the joy of how lucky I was to have spent those five weeks at Northwestern.

Allegra Tepper, California

This program was the experience of a lifetime and will forever hold a place in my heart.

Allison Prang, Illinois

About the NHSI

The National High School Institute, established in 1931, is the nation's oldest and largest university-based program for outstanding high school students. More than 500 students will enroll in the Institute's six divisions: Debate, Film and Video Production, Journalism, Music, Speech and Theatre Arts. Students are affectionately called "Cherubs," a tradition that began in the 1940s.

Campus living and fun

As a NHSI journalism student, you will share a Northwestern residence hall with the program's other participants, as well as with faculty and staff. Your meals will be eaten in a University cafeteria located in or near your dorm. Meals offer you a wide selection, including vegetarian options, and University dietitians are happy to accommodate special dietary needs. Living, dining, and learning together, you will have ample opportunity to get to know your fellow participants and to make lasting friends.

Just 12 miles north of Chicago, the Evanston campus stretches for a mile along Lake Michigan's western shore and offers you jogging trails, a beautiful private beach, and a state-of-the-art fitness and athletic facility.

Admission requirements

To apply to the Journalism Division, you must:

- rank academically in the top quarter of your high school class;
- submit a current high school transcript and a letter of recommendation;
- submit the results of the Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test (PSAT) and/or other standardized tests;
- complete your junior year of high school in May or June of 2010;
- meet a high standard of character, dependability, and intelligence;
- give evidence of background, special ability and/or interest in journalism.

Admission is competitive; decisions are based on ability and merit.

Faculty

Professor Roger Boye is director of the NHSI Journalism Division. For many years he was assistant dean of Northwestern's Medill School of Journalism, one of the nation's most distinguished journalism programs. He has taught in the NHSI since 1971.

The program's full-time teachers have rich and varied backgrounds in journalism. Lecturers include journalists from the media in Chicago and elsewhere, as well as Northwestern faculty members. Past guest speakers have included television journalists, newspaper editors, columnists, and Pulitzer Prize-winning reporters.

Katie Tang

Application deadline

Applications, recommendations, and transcripts must be received by 4 p.m. on March 26, 2010. Decision letters will be mailed to applicants on or before April 2, 2010. Students are strongly encouraged to submit three samples of their work, such as stories published in high school newspapers (see list of items at bottom of application form). The Journalism Division does not accept applications by fax or e-mail.

Fees

The basic fee for this program is $4,700. The cost includes tuition, room, board, health service, field trips, and group events. Any additional expenses are at your discretion.

Scholarships and financial aid

Last year, 26 students shared $50,200 worth of scholarships and financial aid awarded through the Journalism Division. If you wish to apply for assistance, you should complete and return the financial aid section of the application form. Grants are made on the basis of financial need and academic achievement.

In addition to grants made directly from the Journalism Division's budget, these special awards will be available:

Joan Beck and Ruth Moss Buck Journalism Scholarships

William J. and Catherine Maloney Scholarship

Nestle USA Scholarships

Mary Lou Song Cherub Alumni Scholarship

Wrigley Foundation Scholarships

Diane Granat Yalowitz Memorial Fund Scholarships
